

The superiority of the philosophic life

In Book IX Plato offers three 'proofs' that the just person leads a happier and more pleasant life than the unjust person. The second (which tacitly assumes that the philosophic life is the perfectly just life) is at 580c-583a. Try to reduce it to a formal argument, that is to say, to a sequence of premises followed by a conclusion.