

[What follows is an example of what your assignment should look like. You will write a line or two of text and cite the sources for the information you use. The purpose of this assignment is to get your methods down pat before moving on to the longer bibliographies that are due later in the course.]

Anna Student
6 January 2004
Citation Sample

Rathje argues that we misunderstand the contents of landfills.¹ Estimates of household garbage production vary widely. The National Association of Realtors estimates that New Yorkers generate more than six pounds each day.²

[Note the differences between the way we cite articles from journals and how we cite books. Note how citations (also called footnotes or endnotes, and the choice is yours) differ from bibliographic entries. Note as well that we use Arabic, not Roman numerals to enumerate our notes. Needless to say, for your assignment, you will cite a different book and journal article than the ones used in this example.]

¹William L. Rathje and Cullen Murphy, Rubbish!: The Archaeology of Garbage (Tucson, AZ: University of Arizona Press, 2001), 84.

²National Association of Realtors, "The Average New York City Household Generates 6.2 Pounds of Garbage Each Day," Journal of Property Management 68, no. 3 (2003): 11.

Works Cited

- National Association of Realtors. "The Average New York City Household Generates 6.2 Pounds of Garbage Each Day." Journal of Property Management 68, no. 3 (2003): 11-14.
- Rathje, William L., and Cullen Murphy. Rubbish!: The Archaeology of Garbage. Tucson, AZ: University of Arizona Press, 2001.

[Bonus question: Where's Waldo? How many differences can you identify between citations and bibliographic entries? Between journals and books?]

rev 6 January 2004