This robot loosely models the behavior of a cockroach. It moves forward until it encounters a bright light, and then stops. Not any more complex than the mole, this roach robot just reacts to light instead of a touch.

This program uses ports and other modifiers to the individual commands instead of just assuming default values for them. It also explores some of the techniques for controlling the movement of a robot.